F. NINTH CIRCUIT SELECTION PROCESS

The Court of Appeals uses a competitive open-selection merit process in making appointments for the fourteen-year term of office of a bankruptcy judge. It is an extended and time-consuming procedure. Applicants should expect the entire process to take about six months. Following is a brief description of this selection process.

1. The process is initiated by a district Merit Screening Committee (MSC) made up of the administrative circuit judge, the chief district judge, the chief bankruptcy judge, state bar president, local bar association president, and dean of a law school within the district, or their designees. This committee reviews applications received, conducts background reference checks on selected applicants, and interviews those deemed most qualified. There are no funds available to reimburse applicants for their travel expenses at this interview stage. The interview time for any one candidate generally lasts about 30 to 45 minutes. The MSC prepares a written report and recommends the most outstanding applicants for further consideration.

2. The MSC's recommendations are then considered by the Court-Council Committee on Bankruptcy Appointments (Committee). The Committee is composed of three or four U.S. circuit judges and one chief bankruptcy judge. The Committee considers the candidates referred by the MSC, and makes any additional inquiries it deems necessary (which normally includes another interview).
3. Based on the interview session and background checks, the Committee prepares a report to the Ninth Circuit Judicial Council (Council), certifying that appropriate recruitment procedures were followed. The Council is composed of circuit and district judges and is the governing administrative body of the Circuit. It is the Council's responsibility to certify that appropriate recruitment procedures were followed.
4. The Committee also sends a report to the full Court of Appeals recommending the name of one candidate for each vacancy to be filled.
5. Once the Court of Appeals makes its nomination for appointment, an FBI and IRS check of the nominated candidate is initiated. This generally requires 8 to 12 weeks. Upon determination by the Court of Appeals that the investigative reports do not contain information that would make it reconsider its nomination, it issues an Order of Appointment. It is only at this point that a public announcement regarding the appointment is made.
